The Story So Far:

On Good Friday 1993 Marylyn Abbott discovered West Green House for the first time. She found a sleeping beauty, with ruined buildings, walls and gardens remains, all surrounded by five acres of brambles reaching twelve foot high, growing in marshland. But the saddest sights were the the follies, in desperate need of restoration. Now nearly three decades later new gardens have been planted in the walled garden and the Lakefield surrounded by a series of new gardens, its follies secured, but all these extraordinary structures are weather prone and need constant attention to survive for future generations.

The highest priority on this list is the beautiful Nymphaeum, one of the focal points of the Garden, whose stonework and statuary are under restoration and last year the iconic wooden bridge was replaced and the Chinese pavilion restored, but the restoration projects continue.

The Gardens at West Green are not supported financially by the National Trust or any other organisation or charity. As a friend of West Green House you join us as the only outside support for the garden and will play a role in securing its future.
